DES MOINES OFFICE

A veteran lawyer with more than 25 years under his belt, Randy Armentrout looks at situations from many angles. "I consider myself a creative person and am constantly thinking outside the box." Randy knows one size doesn't fit all. He moves from corporate offices to courtrooms looking for the best solutions to ever-changing challenges to businesses.

Working in both litigation and labor and employment law, Randy often represents employers in cases involving allegations of workplace discrimination and harassment, as well as allegations of unpaid wages and hostile work environments. "It's an interesting field of law," he says. "People spend much of their time in the workplace interacting with each other, and a variety of situations unfold there. Every case is unique."

Randy helps employers protect proprietary information and trade secrets. He also handles commercial litigation in the area of finance and leasing. He has handled multiple appellate cases that have favorably developed the Uniform Commercial Code.

Randy enjoys traveling with his family and attending his children's music events, equestrian competitions, and school activities. The Hawkeye fan and former University of Iowa marching band member still plays the tuba, and each year you'll find him marching in the alumni parade.
