CEDAR RAPIDS OFFICE

Teamwork and service are central tenets of Brian Shust’s law practice, starting with his 10 years on active duty in the U.S. Air Force Judge Advocate General’s (JAG) Corps. “Being part of something bigger than myself and serving others for a greater good is what drives me,” Brian says. “My passion is supporting forward-thinking teams, big or small.”

In his combined transactional and litigation practice, Brian applies his service-minded approach and unique experience to client advocacy and business counseling. As a JAG officer, he provided legal advice during every facet of the government contracting life cycle. He counseled on soliciting, awarding, and administering contracts, including ensuring regulatory compliance. He led the JAG Corps acquisition integrity office, overseeing over 125 fraud attorneys and advising federal investigators on the legal issues surrounding procurement fraud and corruption. His diverse contracts experience allows him to identify what it means to be a successful business and how to win contracts.

Brian has extensive litigation and investigation experience, which helps him negotiate practical solutions to protect client interests. He defended the Air Force against contract protests and claims in federal courts and boards, and he was military prosecutor for several years. He values a big-picture approach coupled with zealous advocacy.

Now, in his private practice, Brian maintains the values of teamwork and service that have guided his life. “The people I’m working with and working for inspire me,” he says. He enjoys the challenge of helping clients unpack the nuances to achieve their goals. “Lawyers exist to solve problems. Thinking strategically is vital to finding creative solutions.”

With two small children, Brian values the time he devotes to being a husband and father. His new Iowa roots also bring him closer to his extended family. “My family has been blessed to experience different parts of the country for the past 10 years,” Brian says. “Now, I am thrilled to raise my family in one place and instill the amazing values of Iowans.”
